"THE BONE-HEAD AGE."

This is a real true story of those good old days before prohibition. It's all about a little cute cave girl that lived in the wilds and wore tiger skins. She used a Dinoparis for a step ladder from her second story window. She manhandled big rough lions and made them carry her about from place to place, none of them ever dared get fresh with her.

On the cliff by the ocean this dame decides to do some diving. Then her lion wants to try it too-- but at first he has a faint heart, so it's an awful high, long dive, so wild Rose has to shove him overboard. This sort of treatment makes the lion "sore" and a chase is on. Wild Rose runs up a coconut tree and when the lion comes along, she drops a coconut on his nape skull.

Old Explorer Al Falfa was around that territory, and was out for a ride on his favorite Hippo. When he took these rides, he was always accompanied by a caravan of fruit carrying cats, that danced Egyptian dances as they toddled along.

This unscrupulous Explorer, has a lovely little wife at home, but like a lot of his kind, when he spies little Wild Rose, sitting gracefully on a high limb of the coconut tree, he becomes flirtatious. In fact he serenades her. His Hippo had a lovely set of ivory teeth and was also musical, so old Al opened his mouth and played on the ivories.

Of course little innocent wild Rose is thrilled by such attention. She waves to the old Geezer. He gets excited and then the Hippo decides to close his mouth with half of Al inside. Finally, Al gets out alright and climbs the tree to his new "love". For a time they get on swimmingly. The old Al, fresh thing that he is; Oh! he's got an awful nerve! Horrid. Well any way he edges over close and asks for a kiss, and then he got a swell clout in the jaw that knocks him down off the limb, he lands and crashes into the ground, he gets up and starts chase for his wild Rose. They run up on the top of her house where she picks up a spiked club and knocks him for a mile and a half of telegraph pole, but he woke up and still declared his love, to the finish.

AESOP SAYS:-

"No matter how shocking a girl may be there is always some boob willing to be her shock Absorber."
